

Phone numbers and websites to keep handy:

If you suspect your pet has been poisoned (symptoms may include vomiting, diarrhea, lethargy and seizures), seek veterinary medical help right away. Call a local emergency vet for advice and to find out whether they should see your pet. If they are not immediately available for advice, call the ASPCA Animal Poison Control Center at (888) 426-4435

www.aspc.org - a great resource for all things pet-related and they will also send you free emergency window decals to alert first responders if you have pets that may need rescue. <https://secure.aspc.org/take-action/order-your-pet-safety-pack>

An updated list of the best pet-friendly cleaning products and where to buy them can be found on the Business Insider website: <https://www.businessinsider.com/best-pet-safe-cleaning-products>

Another resource we like for finding non-toxic, pet-friendly alternatives to traditional household cleaners is Animal Wellness Magazine: <https://animalwellnessmagazine.com/household-cleaners-safe-pets/>

The best way to keep your pet safe is to be proactive and look at things or situations like your pet might look at them. When in doubt, assume your dog, cat or rabbit can fit into small cracks, squeeze into that space or will try to eat that plant. It is on us to be responsible guardians for those who depend on us. Supervise, be aware, be pet safe.
